

1. Looking at the scores by School Type charter schools have higher passing rate for math and reading than district school type. Plus looking at the top five schools they were all charter school that confirms this observation.
2. Looking at the math and reading scores it looks like that students had lower math schools compare to reading scores.
3. There is no correlation between scores by school spending and average reading or average math scores.